

To Celebrate or Not To Celebrate

When do we associate, in order to celebrate, what are we celebrating?

What is it to celebrate?

How do we celebrate?

What do we celebrate?

An X chromosome?

Do we seek prominence or dominance?

Can celebration be a substitute for joy?

There is wide diversity within the category called women.

What is it that all women have in common?

An orientation? An outlook?

A nature? A pattern of behaviour?

A function?

An appearance? A morphology?

There are distinctive characteristics of the female brain.

What effect do those characteristics have?

There is so called intuition.

While there are female mediums
and ghost whisperers, there is a male mentalist.

While we have a female empath
we have a male logician, in the person of Spock or Data.

To Celebrate or Not To Celebrate

As Des Cartes said:

“I think, therefore I am”.

However, do women think in the same way men think?

Many things are relevant to women that are irrelevant to men.

The opposite is also true.

Can I compare Joan of Arc to Alexander the Great?

Can I compare Queen Victoria to King James?

Each had a role in history unable to be filled by the other.

Alexandra David-Neel is an all time hero to me.

She had to disguise herself in order to gain access to certain lairs of Tibetan Buddhism.

Here, on these (newsletter and website) pages,
we practice a very broad acceptance of everything from alchemy to Judaism.

We seem to allow our orientation
that says:

this is what I am taking into account,
what are you taking into account?

To Celebrate or Not To Celebrate

Together, can we figure out what is true?
That is a rare policy (statement),
much to be cherished.

In recent years, there have been some outstanding female authors and information sources.

Here are a few, with links to some of their writings:

Jane Roberts

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Jane_Roberts

Betty White

<http://www.spiritwritings.com/bettywhite.html>

Edith Fiore, Ph.D.

<http://www.librarything.com/author/fioreedith>

Ruth Montgomery

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Ruth_Montgomery